Surveying Done By Unqualified, Group Claims

The Eastern New York Society of Professional Land Surveyors reports that in the past month it has received reports of several possible misrepresentation cases, in which non-qualified persons were retained for work that falls within the duties of a licensed professional land surveyor.

Under state law, the group explained, land surveying is reserved as the exclusive practice of those who have satisfied the legal qualifications for licensure in the state. Legally qualified surveyors from other states or countries may practice in the state for a limited period under conditions described by law.

The unit also explained that a land surveyor is one who surveys areas for their correct determination and description, or for the establishment of reestablishment of land boundaries and the plotting of lands and subdivisions.
